“ Remembering Bill from our time in the music department at Pittsburg. One night a group of us were sitting around when Bill said he wanted us to listen to something. He put a record on and found the right song. When it came to a particular spot in the song, he said, “now listen to this”. He said the guy on the sax came in too soon, and he played it again so that we could hear it again. He just laughed and laughed. That was the guy I remember: smart with a great sense of humor. I’m sorry he is gone, Debbie. I know you must have had a great life together.

“ Melanie and I remember Bill so fondly from high school. He was so intelligent, talented, and personable. He was fun to be with. We always looked forward to seeing him and Debbie at my class reunions, which we hold every five years. When Melanie and I connected with Bill and Debbie at the reunions, we picked up the conversation as if we had talked the day before. They were both so pleasant and interesting. They both made our class reunions very special and memorable for us. We will miss Bill this October when we have our 60th class reunion. Dan Stanley
